

My family and I own and operate Classy Creek Farm which is home to registered Milking Shorthorn and Brown Swiss cattle (and a few goats). We always call it an “out of control 4-H project” but I know my family cherishes being able to work together on our farm just as much as I do. I grew up showing registered Holsteins with my cousins and even met my husband at the county fair; the rest is history. As a family, we continue to show cattle as well as lease our animals to local kids interested in learning about showing dairy cattle, all while working off the farm full-time. My husband, Chad, is a truck driver for a local waste management company. Both our kids are involved in agriculture. Our daughter, Kaylah, is currently on the path to completing her master’s degree in Agriculture Education and our son, Jordan, is a heavy equipment operator for a local waste management company.

I graduated from SUNY Cobleskill with a bachelor’s degree in Agriculture Business. I spent many years in the corporate world, but agriculture has always been my calling.

I most recently worked for Dairy One, Inc as a Dairy Records Service Specialist, where I consulted with producers on management decisions via records. Over the years, I have worked for a variety of agriculture businesses while simultaneously growing our bull calf and registered cattle operation. I’ve been lucky enough to be involved in the dairy industry in many ways including leading the Got Cows 4-H club, serving as a board member of our county fair, and helping plan local and regional cattle shows. I’m excited to bring all the skills I’ve acquired over the years to serve the members of the American Milking Shorthorn Society. I am looking forward to sharing thoughts about the breed and learning more about the organization. I’m committed to moving our breed further and I am excited to meet all our passionate breeders along the way.
